Aloha from FHEP!

Fair Housing Enforcement Program at our annual Strategic Planning Retreat

Every year the Fair Housing Enforcement Program (FHEP) retreats from our headquarters on Bethel Street to evaluate the past year and make goals for the upcoming one. During the 2015 Strategic Planning Meeting, FHEP decided to focus on reaching out to the COFA community, public housing residents, homeless shelters, and the LGBTQ community. We are happy to report progress in all four strategic areas, but mostly with our program's achievement in helping the COFA community with language access in public housing and doing general "know-your-rights" workshops throughout Oahu so that COFA citizens are better able to understand their rights and responsibilities when it comes to rental housing in Hawaii.

During the 2016 meeting, our team has decided to refine and continue our strategic efforts with the COFA, homeless, LGBTQ, and public housing communities. In addition, we have created a new strategic area focusing on mental health so that our team is better equipped to assist individuals in crisis and ensure that

All people in Hawaii have the right to make housing choices without regard to race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability, familial status, age, gender identity or expression, sexual orientation, marital status, or HIV infection.

If you believe you have been denied access to housing because of discrimination, you may call the FHEP Hotline at 808-527-8024 or from the Neighbor Islands, 866-527-3247. Leave a message and our Intake Specialist will call to

Our job would be even more difficult without the cooperation of our partners and other community organizations. If you belong to an organization that works in one of the above areas and would like to reach out, please call our hotline or reach us through our website.

Important News from HUD

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) has recently released important memos in the areas of harassment based on a protected class status, discrimination against victims of domestic violence, gender identity, and language access.

- On September 13, 2016 HUD published a final rule formalizing legal standards under the Fair Housing Act (FHA) for sexual and other forms of harassment in housing. In addition, HUD issued a FHA guidance on local 'nuisance ordinances' that may lead to housing discrimination against survivors of domestic violence and other persons in need of emergency services. Check out HUD's final rule on harassment by clicking here. To read the FHA guidance on nuisance laws against victims of domestic violence, click here.

- On September 15, 2016 HUD issued a "Limited English Proficiency" (LEP) guidance that addresses how the Fair Housing Act (FHA) would apply to claims of housing discrimination brought by the people (more than 25 million people) because they do not speak, read, or write English proficiently. While English proficiency is not a protected class under the federal FHA, it is commonly tied to cases of national origin discrimination, making LEP within the Act's protections. For landlords, this means that it is illegal to make speaking English a requirement for housing purposes. To read the full guidance, click here.
- On September 20, 2016 HUD published another final rule- this time for gender identity guidelines when it comes to HUD funded single-sex transitional shelters. Previously, HUD encouraged single-sex shelters funded by their department to provide all individuals, including transgender individuals and other individuals who do not identify with the sex they were assigned at birth, with access to programs, benefits, services, and accommodations in accordance with their gender identity without being subjected to intrusive questioning or being asked to provide documentation. The new guidance converts HUD's previous recommendation into a requirement. To read the full guidance, click here.

Honolulu High-Rise: 36 Stories and No Affordable Housing

September 7, 2016

by Anita Hofschneider

As part of an incentive to build affordable housing units around upcoming rail transit centers in Honolulu, new laws have relaxed building density rules for new housing development. The Manaolana Hotel Place and Residential Condominium project, which would be built across the street from the Hawaii Convention Center, is the first to seek permission from the City Council to develop under the new laws. The project proposes to be 68 feet taller than other high-rises in the area and have a mix of hotel and condo units, none of which would be affordable.

UPDATE: Manaolana Project Stalled

by Anita Hofschneider

The Honolulu City Council voted to push back the decision to approve or deny permitting for the Manaolana Hotel Place and Residential Condominium project. According to the Department of Planning and Permitting, the permitting process that would relax laws around a project's building density and height made no mention of what to do with projects that's plans did not include affordable housing units. The vote to stall the project came as a relief to affordable housing advocates.

Only 4.2% of Hawaii's Public Housing Units Are Accessible

September 12, 2016

Upon investigation into Hawaii's accessible public housing stock, only 4.2% of the state's current total public housing units are ADA compliant, meaning accessible to those living with disabilities. According to the 2014 American Community Survey, approximately 25.6% of the state's population living in poverty also reported to be living with some type of disability. The Hawaii Public Housing Authority has stated that over 100 more units are being modified to meet accessibility requirements, but even with their efforts, a huge gap remains for affordable and accessible housing.

Living the American Dream- It Depends on your Zip Code

America is supposed to be a place where poor kids can work their way out of poverty through hard work; a place where poor kids can achieve the "American Dream". A study done last year by Harvard social scientists on American upward mobility has shed startling new light on children growing up in poor neighborhoods. Upward mobility, or more specifically the ability that poor children have to earn more than their poor parents did once they reach adulthood, depends very much on where they live and at what age they move from a poor neighborhood (if they're able to move at all). This leaves some Americans with a daunting reality- no matter how hard you study or work, your zip code in itself may be a poverty trap. This New York Times article written by David Leonhardt, Amanda Cox, and Claire Cain Miller is a must read. Click here for the full story.
